

Money Mover invited to join fintech industry body

CITY-based start-up Money Mover has been invited to become a founder member of Innovate Finance, an industry body set up to promote the UK's rapidly growing fintech sector.

Launched by the Chancellor of the Exchequer earlier this month, and supported by the City of London Corporation and the Canary Wharf Group, Innovate Finance is to be the voice of UK fintech, promoting the new era of tech-led financial services innovators. Whether they are young start-ups or established industry players, Innovate Finance aims to be the voice of a new movement that believes in the immense transformative power of technology to improve every aspect of banking, finance and commerce.

Money Mover is an online platform providing foreign currency exchange and global payments to SMEs and 'mass affluent' private individuals – potentially saving clients thousands of pounds in fees and commission.

As a promising pre-launch fintech company, Money Mover has been selected among 54 founding members. Membership also includes the more established UK fintech community, and the most enlightened of the global industry players such as the major banks and payments networks.

Hamish Anderson, CEO of Money Mover, said: "If the UK is to dominate fintech in the 21st century as we did financial services in the 20th, the industry, innovators and investors need to be aligned.

"At Money Mover we believe that Innovate Finance is the right forum for collaboration, transformation and success."
